

Flexible Payment Commitments

The Seven Stones Pricing Narrative

To best reflect our commitment to a world in which everybody matters, Seven Stones uses money as a tool to:

- Support what we care about most
- Express generosity
- Empower reciprocity through a gratitude feedback loop
- Enhance exchange of value among people and between organizations

This commitment leads us to think about currency and forms of exchange, our relationships with those we work with and how to communicate our priorities.

Seven Stones' thinking continues to evolve. Currently we ask our clients to choose, within a range, how much to pay for our services.

In a sustainably abundant world, we might begin by noticing that we are all interwoven into a web of exchanges we call commerce. Ideally those exchanges are designed to help humans thrive and prosper.

As Seven Stones invites you into the practice of creating a world where we all matter, this is an opportunity to investigate your own relationship to money and exchange. Through the practices of generosity and reciprocity, discover how you might operate in the context of a sustainably abundant world-view.

A Moment to Pause

Truthfully, this is an opportunity to reflect on your access to resources and recognize the web of commitments you are holding. We rarely give ourselves the opportunity to be in an inquiry to align our commitment and financial resources. This is a time to pause and take a look at what sustainable abundance means in this moment. Choose where you will stand:

HONOR Our Connection

Exchange Created Value

When we enter into an exchange we allow for all of our needs to be discussed and we look at what gifts, resources and talents can be exchanged in a way for all to be cared for. The exchange allows for money not to stop our working together, it opens up a conversation about alternative currencies and ways of valuing exchanges and it allows us to experiment with unlinking time from money.

Generosity Welcomed

We founded The Sustainable Abundance Project: an initiative dedicated to educating others and producing a set of pathways for individuals and organizations to live from and work within Sustainable Abundance. Donate above and beyond your own tuition/fees so that others may explore the courses and coaching available through Seven Stones as well allow your funds to flow toward a global movement.
